Reviewing the Role and Responsibilities of Managing Brokers

The Independent Advisory Group (IAG) report made several recommendations regarding the role and responsibilities of managing brokers. It noted that “the regulatory regime has not kept pace with the growth and evolution of business” and that changes in this area have “made it more difficult and complex for managing brokers to exercise their duty to supervise the conduct of licensees.”

The Office of the Superintendent of Real Estate (OSRE) intends to take a high-level, broad approach involving fundamentally re-examining the role and responsibilities of managing brokers in light of changing industry business models and practices. The role of the managing broker is critical to how real estate is practiced in BC, and OSRE believes it is important that the perspective of managing brokers helps inform any future regulatory reform in this area. Superintendent of Real Estate Micheal Noseworthy will summarize OSRE’s plans to review the role and responsibilities of managing brokers in BC’s changing real estate landscape, engaging managing brokers to better understand how evolving business models and practices have impacted on their work and to identify challenges and opportunities moving forward.

1:00 – 1:20 pm

Regulation and Compliance in a Time of Change

Cooperation between regulators, member associations and industry leaders is an important way to manage change while ensuring that regulatory reforms meet the public interest. The Council is moving towards more open, interactive, transparent consultations. In this presentation, Executive Officer Erin Seeley will reflect on the key themes and issues emerging from consultations over the post-implementation period, and share the ways managing brokers are fostering high standards of ethical conduct and professionalism.
